NOTE AND COMMENT

There is in the opinion of the HERALD room and a sphere of usefulness in Revelstoke for a Conservative Association. It is true that there is not much going on just now in Dominion politics, calling for active work, still the old saying that in politics the time to organize is immediately after a defeat is a sound maxim. There is plenty for an organization of this kind to do, even if the elections are a long way off. In this rising place new people are constantly coming in and it is important that there should be a nucleus which would draw together members of the party, and by which the old Conservatives of this place and the newcomers should be able to get to know one another. Besides this Revelstoke is favorably situated among British Columbia points as a place frequently visited by prominent members and leaders of the party. Only recently Sir Charles Tupper, Hon. G. E. Foster, Sir Mackenzie Bowell and Hon. Clark Wallace have all stayed over here. There is no doubt that had any organization been in existence to receive them, arrangements could easily have been made to get some of these gentlemen to give us an address on the present policy and prospects of the party, and so keep alive the strong Conservative feeling existing here and the interest of Conservatives in the work of the party. Revelstoke Conservatives put up a splendid fight at the last election. Let us get together again, as Conservatives in other British Columbia points are doing, renew our interest in Conservatism and do perhaps, even in these quiet times, some effectual work for the party.

The HERALD wishes to urge upon its readers of all stripes of politics the necessity of seeing that their names are placed on the voters lists without delay. Next session will probably see some measure of redistribution brought down in the Provincial house, and Kootenay will certainly be allotted one, if not two, more seats in the legislature. The number of seats we shall get will depend altogether on the strength of our voters' lists. It is important, therefore, for everybody properly qualified to register and so both help to demonstrate to the legislature the political importance of Kootenay, and secure himself a vote at the coming election. Persons wishing to register can obtain the official forms of application at the HERALD office.

The HERALD congratulates this community on the result of last night's meeting. Nothing now remains but for the elected committee to circulate the petition asking the provincial legislature to pass a special act embodying a charter of incorporation to meet the peculiar requirements of this town. The premier, when here, stated that there would be no difficulty in getting such legislation, which will of course embody clauses which settling any difficulties arising from the defect of title of some of our property holders. The area to be incorporated will of course be the four townsites, all of the original owners of which have signified that they will support incorporation, with the exception of Mr. A. S. Farwell, or whatever interest or combination of interests are represented by that name, who has now no title to anything worth talking about, and is in no position in consequence to either help or hinder the movement. The population on this area, is, as near as can be got at, about fifteen hundred. The HERALD hopes to see the petition receive the requisite amount of signatures at once, since no time should be lost in getting notice given of the special act, so that it may come early on the list next session.

The Prospect of Conservatism

In a private interview with Mr. Clark Wallace he expressed himself very sanguine of the future prospects of the Conservative party. The party would have to get rid of a number of useless members and then it would be in a position at the next election to appear in its true light. The hon. gentleman left on Thursday morning to take a hand in the coming bye election in Centre Toronto.

Pete Walker and wife leave for the east on Monday next. He says "he has had enough of the wild and woolly west—age creeping on apace, he thinks he is entitled to a few years repose amid the scenes of his childhood." Mr. and Mrs. Walker will be greatly missed by their many friends in this district who all unite in wishing them a hearty God speed.—Trout Lake Topic.

ORANGEMEN CELEBRATE

RECEPTION AND SUPPER GIVEN TO N. CLARKE WALLACE

By the Local Orange Lodge in Honor of the Visit of the Grand Master.—A Pleasant Evening.—A Large Crowd Present.—A Rousing Speech by the Guest of the Evening.

As was intimated in our last issue Hon. N. Clarke Wallace, Right Worshipful Grand Master of the Grand Orange Lodge, was extended an invitation by the Revelstoke L. O. L. No. 1658 to a banquet here on Wednesday evening last, which was accepted with pleasure. Upon his arrival from Kaslo on Wednesday afternoon a committee consisting of E. Adair and R. P. Pettipiece met him and escorted him to the residence of Mr. Adair, where the evening was spent until lodge hour, 7:30. Upon proceeding to the Oddfellow's hall where some forty members had already assembled, lodge was opened and three new members were initiated, Mr. Wallace occupying the Worshipful Master's chair. Hon. N. Clarke Wallace having been asked by the lodge to grant a dispensation allowing the members here to open the Scarlet Chapter, owing to the expense of attending the district lodge at New Westminster, the matter was taken up and leave was granted to open the Scarlet Chapter here as soon as other necessary arrangements were made. Lodge was then closed, and the ladies proceeded to set the tables, which were soon laden with good things for the inner man. Great credits due Mrs. Lee and Mrs. Adair for the trouble they took in preparing such a sumptuous repast. Hon. N. Clarke Wallace as the guest of the evening was seated at the right of the chairman, Worshipful Master Adair, while the Deputy-Master, Dr. McKechnie, was to the left. After all had enjoyed themselves at the table, the chairman called upon Messrs. McKechnie, Jeffs, and Spragge for short addresses, all of whom replied in a few well chosen words on behalf of the lodge. These were interspersed with musical and vocal selections rendered by Mr. J. Savage, Wm. Lee, Miss Savage and Mrs. Lee. Then amidst cheers from all present the Honorable Grand Master, the guest, was called upon for a speech.

Upon rising Mr. Wallace congratulated the members on having so many ladies present and upon the live and progressive lodge which Revelstoke possessed. He felt proud, though some 3,000 miles from home, to have the privilege of initiating three more new members into the grand order, and also of being among those present during the evening. British Columbia had many things to boast of. There were the fisheries, with which those of Eastern Canada had so long been proud, could not compare. There were the timber limits and agricultural resources. He spoke of his trip to Salmon Arm and said we should be proud of the great resources of our fertile valleys. Then there were our mineral riches, which were a marvel, and on this point he mentioned the Big Bend district in very favorable terms. Speaking of the extraordinary increase in the revenue of the province, Mr. Johnson, one of the customs officers had told him in the south that our imports reached $1,000 a day and our exports a million a month, and this with development only begun. Capital and enterprise would produce a Klondike here. The eyes of the world are upon British Columbia and the Great West. Speaking of the splendid progress of Orangeism throughout Canada he said that where ever Orangeism existed were to be found loyalty to the country and contentment in every locality. We should feel proud of this grand association. History in the past had shewn the necessity of Protestantism. He was glad to say that there were over 2,000 lodges in Canada. Even in Quebec, where it formerly was a criminal act for a man to declare himself an Orangeman there were now several lodges. Since the hard struggle of the order for incorporation, lodges had spread in every direction. We now need no favors, but only the right to increase the privileges of Orangeism. In Ontario alone there were now 120 lodges and in Manitoba and the West there were three Grand lodges. In British Columbia lodges were springing up in every rising town, lodges now existing in Sandon, Kaslo, Slocan City, Nelson, Kamloops, Salmon Arm, New Westminster, Revelstoke and other points, all firmly established. When the liberties of England were threatened by James II, King William the Prince of Orange, commenced the struggle which ended in such glorious results. He swept away Rome and France and reasserted the rights of Englishmen. Our motto is "No Surrender." Orangeism was needed then and is needed now more than ever. Had Orangemen weakened then the seeds of dissolution would have been sown and there would have been no Jubilee this year in honor of Her Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria. The Orange Order had survived every attack and the Order was now more deeply rooted in the affection of loyal men than ever before. Roman Catholics had declared they would have separate schools in Manitoba and the North West. If they had got them there, they would for the same reason, have wanted them everywhere. Now that Canada was carving out provinces in the west, had separate schools been granted in one, they would have had to be granted everywhere. The Dominion parliament had nothing to do with these questions, except under certain conditions. When these matters were brought up before our noble leader Sir John Macdonald, the Roman Catholics were told to go back to their province, where they would get justice. The interference of the church of Rome always had the same effect in the education of the people. In Spain, only four per cent. and in Italy five per cent. of the population could read or write. In Mexico they had been compelled to prohibit the interference of the church with the schools. Separate schools are a thing of the past. We will never go back to fifty years ago. It will be a sore day when Rome succeeds in running Canada. The papal ablegate had dabbled in their affairs already. His visit was not in the interests of the church but a political dodge. When Desjardins was summoned to Rome, Tarte started a race to see who would get there first. It looked very much as though the Pope was trying to run our affairs. Both governments might yet be defeated before this question is settled. Any government allowing the Pope to dictate to them is unworthy of the confidence of the people.

The Grand Master concluded with a glowing tribute to the Great British Empire, of which Canada forms so great a part.

Before breaking up votes of thanks were passed to Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Adair, and the ladies, the visitors and the chairman.

THE HORNE-PAYNE SYNDICATE

The Situation as Sized up by the Nelson Tribune.

The affairs of the Lillooet, Fraser River & Cariboo Gold Fields Company have got into a bad mess, and as a matter of course the province of British Columbia is being saddled with the blame. While there may have been room for complaint in the management of the company's affairs in this province, it is well to remember that it is very easy to be wise after the event. The provincial manager of the company may have purchased prospects at a higher figure than their development warranted, and properties in which he was interested may have been put into the assets of the company at good prices, but it should be remembered that payment for the same was accepted in L. F. R. & C. G. F. company stock, when had there been any attempt at fraud payment might easily have been arranged in cash. There was at least an evidence of faith in the company's future on the part of F. S. Barnard, which is more than can be said for the English stockholders associated with R. M. Horne-Payne. It is currently reported that the first move made by this group of stockholders was the unloading of sufficient stock upon confiding French investors, at double its par value, to indemnify themselves for any possible loss which might come upon them by reason of their own holding. If there has been bad faith in the matter it was shown by the English stockholders themselves and not by the British Columbians who organized the company. It is well in these matters to place the blame where it rightly belongs. That R. M. Horne-Payne carefully nursed the boom in the Lillooet Fraser River stocks no one can possibly deny. If the provincial members of the company are to blame for inducing investment in the company stock at par, how is Horne-Payne absolved from blame for inducing investment at 100 per cent. premium?

THE OBJECTIVE POINT

On the Overland Route to Yukon From Interior Points

The point at which the eastern and British Columbia routes to the Yukon meet is the mouth of the Dease river, which joins the Liard from the south about 100 miles below the head of that river in Frances Lake. On this stretch of the Liard, 20 miles above the mouth of the Dease, galena ledges from two to ten feet wide carrying about 200 oz. to the ton in silver have recently been discovered by a New Denver prospector, named Alexander McKay. Rich gold diggings are reported above Fort Halkett, which can be reached by canoes from the head of the Liard. From the mouth of the Dease to the junction of the Liard river with the Frances or easterly branch is 30 miles, and then up the Frances river to Frances lake is 60 more. The connection between Frances Lake and Finlayson Lake, in which the Pelly heads is by the Finlayson river. Frances lake is reported by Prof. Dawson as a suitable locality to pasture or winter stock, there being abundance of hay. It forms therefore an excellent base of operations for prospectors on the Pelly river. McKay met two Colorado outfits going up to the lake to winter.

Commonwealth Mining Co.

Mr. W. J. Robinson, secretary-treasurer of the Commonwealth Mining Co., was in town on Wednesday. This company is interested in ten claims in the Trout Lake district. They spent between $5,000 and $6,000 in developing these claims last summer, particularly the Vera and Glenside groups, and will spend a good deal more next season, when a good force of men will be put on on these claims, which are of a very promising character. Mr. Robinson thinks the next three or four years will see big developments in the Lardeau country, and that a smelter on Trout Lake will materialize in the near future.

INCORPORATION

THE FIRST STEP TAKEN TO MAKE REVELSTOKE A CITY

After an Animated Discussion the Meeting Last Night Decides to Appoint a Committee to Take the Initial Move and Get up the Petition for Incorporation.

Mr. W. M. Brown took the chair at the meeting held last night in Peterson's hall to discuss the question of incorporation, under protest as considered the meeting to be only an adjourned meeting from the previous Friday. Mr. P. F. Mathias was chosen secretary. The chairman said the object of the meeting was to get further information on the question of incorporation and called on any person who had any on hand to give it.

Mr. Haig said that on the point of the amount of government expenditure, it was impossible to get any information until the return of Mr. J. D. Graham. As regards other municipalities with the exception of Nelson, Kamloops and Rossland in the opinion of the committee the towns in the interior were in a less advanced stage than Revelstoke, when they incorporated. As to the river bank they did not think it would affect the question of its protection by the government one way or the other.

Moved by J. D. Sibbald, seconded by Chas. Lindmark that the qualification for a vote at the meeting should be that a voter should be a male British subject, 21 years of age, who had resided within a radius of two miles of the government house for a period of six months before the meeting.

Ms. R. S. Wilson spoke strongly in favor of the motion. Business men, doing business in rented premises, were as interested in the question of incorporation as were property owners.

Mr. A. G. M. Spragge said he thought a couple of months residence should be sufficient. Six months would leave out a large number who had only recently come to town. The mover and seconder assented to the change. The motion was carried.

Mr. Chas. Lindmark moved that in the opinion of this meeting the time has come for this town to assume the reins of self-government, and in order to facilitate this object this meeting should now proceed to appoint a civic committee of seven to arrange the necessary steps for the final accomplishment of this object. Seconded by Mr. John Abrahamson.

Mr. J. H. Sutherland said that the question of the comparative amounts of expenditure and taxation by the provincial government had not been decided.

Mr. Sibbald did not think that it affected the question of incorporation one way or the other.

Mr. Haig could not see why we should wait for incorporation until the majority of ratepayers were registered. A government agent was not responsible to the residents except indirectly. A town council elected among ourselves, men of integrity, would manage the affairs of the place to the best advantage of the citizens. The government could not be expected to put in a sewerage system. It seemed to him that there was nothing to fear with regard to the protection of the river bank from incorporation. Rather with a town council as a head we could bring greater pressure on the government to carry out this work. There was no kind of representative body in the town except the board of trade. The general opinion of residents of incorporated towns was that incorporation was a benefit. If it was a benefit to other places, why not to Revelstoke.

Mr. Needham thought we had nothing to pledge for the money, which we require to borrow. As soon as he knew the property belonging to him was his own, he would be for incorporation with both hands. He proposed that the question of incorporation be postponed for another 12 months. Seconded Mr. Peterson.

Mr. Haig said that two-thirds of the property in town could be registered within three months. The only portion of Revelstoke in an unsettled condition was the Farwell townsite. Anyone holding a Dominion title in the old town could get them registered.

Mr. Peterson demanded from Mr. Haig the restoration of his papers sent to Ottawa seven years ago. He also denounced the scavenger for taking away from his premises valuable material, which he required. If he could find out who it was he would have him arrested.

Mr. Needham demanded to know why we cannot get the Farwell titles registered.

Mr. Adair thought the present assessment was unjust and that this was one of the strongest arguments in favor of incorporation. He asked were the proposed limits of the city to be two miles all round the court house.

Mr. Spragge said we were here to do business. A lot of information is wanted, first the area of the proposed city, secondly the population on the area, then the expenditure and taxation of the place under the province, then the estimated revenue and expenditure. He urged the appointment of a committee to inquire into these questions and report.

Mr. Lindmark said such a committee had already been appointed and done the work. He thought the item in their report of $1,200 for a police magistrate unnecessary. One reason for

SATURDAY, NOV. 20, 1897.

Conan Doyle tells a story of a friend of his who had often been told that there is a story in the cupboard of every household, no matter now respectable the house may be, and he determined to put his opinion to a practical test. Selecting for the subject a venerable archdeacon of the church, against whom the most censorous critic had never breathed a word, he went to the nearest post office and despatched this telegram to the reverend gentleman:—"All is discovered; fly at once!" The archdeacon disappeared and has never been heard of since.

Charles A. Dana, the veteran editor, left an estate valued at $1,000,000. Mr. Dana, therefore, as a result of the business direction of the Sun in the 30 years that he was president of the corporation, was able to accumulate a fortune of over $1,000,000, possibly nearly $1,250,000; the greater part of which came from the appreciation in the value of the Sun's stock and the accumulation of dividends. It is certainly as great a success as that achieved by any journalist of Mr. Dana's generation.

Mayor Van Wyck says his election expenses were only $158.75. Greater New York has got a romancer as well as a Tammany operator for its first mayor.

Canadian horses going in to the Yukon via Dyea and Skogway are charged $30 duty each by the American customs officials. Moral: Take the Edmonton route.

FREIGHTING TO YUKON

Proposal on Foot to Open up a Through trail—What Could be Done With a Cart Road.

(From the Calgary Herald)

A proposition is being discussed in the city which if carried out would enable an almost unlimited quantity of freight to be taken to the Yukon next spring at a minimum cost. In connection with the North West Government's project to complete the missing link in the waggon road to Peace river a number of gentlemen are prepared, provided sufficient encouragement is offered, to organize a company at 24 hours notice to build a cart trail to Lake Frances, which is believed to be the heart of the gold bearing region, for considerably less than half what it would cost the Government to build a waggon road. For $50,000 such a company could build a trail and lay down 500,000 lbs of freight at Fort Frances before the end of next July. Stores and trading posts would be established along the route and stopping places for men and horses would be established every 25 miles. The freighting vehicle used would be Maloney's Klondike cart, one hundred of which in charge of ten men will take in as much supplies as 350 pack horses and 70 men, and make quicker time. Mr. Maloney guarantees his cart to go almost anywhere that a horse can and to freight cheaper than waggons even on a good waggon road.

In the interests of the overland route and of Calgary as a supply point, it is hoped that the project will be pushed for all it is worth.

In the Crow's Nest Pass $10 is being asked for hay, three cents per lb. for for oats, and the supply of both is extremely limited.

A wealthy Irish lady, whose summer home is situated near a garrison town in Ireland, once sent an invitation to Capt. Armstrong to take tea with her saying, "that the pleasure of Capt. Armstrong's company is respectfully requested," etc. To her astonishment she rece ved by an orderly the following note: "Enlisted men Jones and Smith have been detailed to do guard duty, but the remainder of Capt. Armstrong's company accept with pleasure Mrs Weyler's polite invitation."

FOUGHT TO THE LAST

Lieutenant McIntyre and His Little Band of Twelve Men Were Killed —Each Man Died from a Bullet Wound.

SIMLA, Nov. 13.—When the British reconoitering force returned to camp in Maidan valley, after the disastrous retreat from Summit Saran Sar Mountain, Lieut. McIntyre and 12 men belonging to the Northampton regiment which had suffered most severely, while saving the wounded, were reported missing. It was hoped they would succeed in reaching the camp. A despatch from Maidan valley shows that the Lieutenant and his companions have been killed. The bodies were found, and it was evident from the position in which the corpses rested, that the little detachment fell gallantly fighting to the last. Every man of the party died from rifle bullet wounds.

CONDEMNED.

When an innocent man is condemned for any crime he doesn't lose hope. His lawyers appeal from one court to another. They are bound to save him, if he can be saved. It is the same way with a good doctor when his patient seems condemned to death by disease.

But doctors make mistakes sometimes; they lose heart too soon. After they have tried everything they know and the patient is no better, they think there is nothing more to be done. They don't always get at the root of the disease. They frequently give a patient up to die of consumption, and are afterwards surprised to see him get strong and well again.

All lung and bronchial diseases are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, because it supplies the system with healthy blood. It puts the vital forces into action and fills the circulation with the life-giving red corpuscles which builds up solid, muscular flesh and healthy nerve-force.

Mrs. W. B. Duncan, of Arlington, Phelps Co., Mo., writes: "My husband took four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery when he was (as he thought) almost into consumption, and we were very thankful that such a medicine could be found. I wish all persons troubled with cough would take it. Long may the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription' be made. I shall always recommend and praise these medicines."

"I will now endeavor to give you a full description of my husband's illness as near as I can," writes Mrs. M. J. Tedder, of Ellington, Reynolds Co., Mo. "Eight years ago last March is the date when he commenced to take Dr. Pierce's medicine. He was formerly a robust and hearty looking young man. He was 31 years old when married, and that winter every time he took a little cold he would cough very hard. He had pains all through his chest and lungs. When summer came he was feeling well and looking well. He said he had always coughed in the winter since a child. He was not alarmed at the symptoms as I was. I knew that his mother and the rest of the family had that dreadful cough and the most of them died with that dreadful disease, consumption. He continued to cough every winter, but kept at work and paid very little attention to his disease until in 1883 he had an attack of pneumonia. From that time he was never as well as he was before. His cough grew worse and worse, although he kept around all the time. Sometimes he would vomit immediately after his meals. He went on in that way for sometime. In the winter of 1888 he coughed all winter and in the spring commenced his work as usual, coughing night and day the most of the time. Then I requested him to try something new, or to go to the doctor. He said 'well, if I go to the doctor I will go to bed, and go there to stay. I will never get well if I depend upon the doctor's medicine.' By this time he was getting very weak, and had no appetite, so he went to the drug store and the druggist said to him 'well I think it the best for you to go to the doctor.' My husband said 'No I will not, for if I do I will die sure, as I have known people with this disease who went to the doctors and next they went to the grave. You know as well as I that the doctors all call this disease hereditary consumption.' 'Well, said the druggist, I will give you Dr. Pierce's medicine, and you can try it as I believe it is the best medicine I have in my store. You can give it a trial.' So my husband commenced Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and also the 'Pellets' and by the time one bottle was gone he was improving. He had a better appetite and was feeling much better. He took seven bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and as many of the 'Pellets.' At the end of that time he looked like a new man, and said he felt like a new person. He has weighed more, since using your medicine than he ever weighed before. He gained about twenty-eight pounds. When he was at his worst he looked like a skeleton, but after he began to look so well and hearty the people would say, 'Well, George, we all thought in the spring that you would be in your grave by this time.' This was in the fall after he took your medicine. Our home doctor had remarked that he could not live very long, and when he saw the change he said, 'Well, I am surprised to see so great a change in that length of time.' At this time the fame of 'Golden Medical Discovery' spread rapidly through all that neighborhood."

BETWEEN TWO SINS

BY BERTHA M. CLAY.

"Yes," said Ulric; "but the man was mistaken. The proper reading of the words is that whosoever takes a man's life shall pay for it with his own."

"If one life pays for another," Lady Culmore broke in, "how can it matter whose life it is?"

Every one looked up in wonder. Her clear, sweet tones vibrated through the room. Her beautiful face was flushed. Sir Rudolph regarded her in astonishment. She went on:

"If any one takes a life and gives a life, does not that equalize matters?" she asked; and I detected something of scornful bitterness in her voice. "If the life given be more valuable than the life taken does not that more than discharge the debt?"

"No," said the rector, in a distinct voice that seemed to startle us—"No. That is the view of a distorted mind, Lady Culmore, of one that does not distinguish clearly between right and wrong."

I saw her shrink as she would have shrunk from a blow.

"What a gloomy conversation!" cried Ulric suddenly. "How can we have drifted into it? Let us dismiss the subject. Lady Culmore, you ought to have dismissed us."

"I have been greatly interested," she said; and again there was something new and strange in her voice, while the light still flashed in her eyes.

During the long discussion husband and wife hardly looked at each other. But at the words "a life for a life" I saw Lady Culmore raise her eyes and fix them on her husband's face. Who could read them with their messages of love, regret, and hope?

So the evening passed; and, when the rector had gone, Sir Rudolph, with a hasty "Good-night," retired also. Lady Culmore, who seemed quite abstracted, walked to the window and drew the blind aside. She stood there looking out into the darkness.

"Kate," whispered my lover, "come here; I want you;" and we went into the conservatory, which was dimly lighted. "My dear"—with a quiet caress—"you have behaved wonderfully well this evening."

"I always behave well, Ulric."

"You did not flirt with the rector at all, and I must make full amends. He has a fine face; he argues well, too. Kate, I am sure that he admires you. Does the bracelet fit, darling?"

This was merely an excuse to hold up my arm and kiss it. I pointed to Lady Culmore standing at the window.

"She will not see me," said Ulric; "and if she does, it will not matter. Fancy, dearest, what I suffer, sitting all night watching your beautiful face, and never able to kiss the lips I love or gaze into the eyes that hold all bliss for me. Kate, I must be indemnified."

It was useless pointing to Lady Culmore. It was useless to do or say anything; and, to be quite honest, perhaps I did not mind so very much.

"Remember," said my lover, with a flush on his handsome face—"remember that I shall speak to my brother tomorrow. I will not put up with another day's delay."

He bade me "Good-night," in his usual loverlike fashion, and went away. Then I crossed over to Lady Culmore. She turned to me when I spoke to her.

"Oh, my dear," she said, "who is it?"

"Who is what?" I asked.

"You should see your own face, Kate; you should see your own eyes. As we stand side by side, you are the very picture of happiness, as I am the picture of woe."

I was ashamed of myself; I wished that I could drive the light of happiness from my face and eyes.

"I am haunted," she said, "by those words, 'A life for a life!' What a strange conversation that was, Kate."

"Neither cheerful nor pleasant," I replied. "And if I were you, Lady Culmore, I would forget all about it."

"I wish," she cried, passionately, "that I could forget all about myself, even to my very name!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Ulric had no chance of fulfilling this threat on the following day, for Sir Rudolph rode off early in the morning to Ulladale, to inspect the houses, of which the rector had spoken. The heat "I wish Sir Rudolph had not gone to Ulladale to-day," said Lady Culmore; "it is so hot, and he will be in and out of those horrible houses. I shall be miserable about him. I have such a sense of coming sorrow on me."

Ulric laughed.

"Now, Nest, we will not have that. Things are bad enough; we will not have any forbodings of coming sorrow."

"I can not help it," she said, with pale, trembling lips.

It was a long, quiet day. Ulric and I spent the morning under the cedar. He read and I worked, with various little happy interludes.

Night came and Sir Rudolph returned in safety. Although Lady Culmore had been anxious concerning him all day, she did not go out to meet him, she gave utterance to none of the joy she felt at seeing him; but I saw that her whole heart went out to him, though she repressed all outward sign of emotion.

Dinner was an utter failure; no one was hungry, no one could eat. Even Ulric succumbed to the heat, and had little to say.

In the drawing room afterward, Lady Culmore, in her white dress seated herself in the shadow. Sir Rudolph opened the windows wide, and pushed away the hangings.

"Let us have what little air there is," he said.

"Kate," exclaimed Ulric, suddenly "sing for us. I found a quaint song the other day, and I brought it home with me."

He placed it on the piano, and I sang it. It was called "Two Pictures."

"I sat in the gathering shadows
And I looked to the west away;
There the last of an unseen artist
Was painting, at close of day,
A strange and beautiful picture
That filled my soul with awe,
And made men think of the city
No mortals ever saw.

"'Paint me, O wonderful artist,'
I cried when the shadows came,
And bid the marvelous glory
Of the western hills aflame—
'Paint me the face of an angel
And lo, before my eyes
Was the face of my saluted mother
In Paradise!

"Paint me the face of a sinner!'
A darker shadow swept
Down the hills, and I thought, in the twilight
The unseen artist wept;
And, lo, from a magical pencil
A face in a moment had grown,
The sad white face of a sinner,
And I knew it for my own!"

Two white hands were laid gently upon my shoulder, and a tearful voice whispered—

"Kate, do you love me?"

"You know that I do, Lady Culmore," I replied.

"Then do not sing another note; I can not bear it. I used to sing once. My voice, they said, was sweet and clear as a silver bell; and I loved music."

"I have never heard you sing, Lady Culmore," I said.

"I have not sung a note since—since we came here," she returned; "and I never shall sing again." And then we parted for the night.

The rector had not been near us all day, nor had he had any news of little Willie; but on the following morning, when we sat at breakfast, all four together, for a wonder, he was announced. He came in looking very anxious, with dark shadows beneath his eyes. Before he greeted us he cried, in a distressed voice:

"Little Willie is very ill."

We were all grieved. The poor rector seemed heartbroken.

"What is the matter?" asked Ulric. "One must not attach too much importance to the ailments of children. They seem to be at death's door one day, and they are quite well again the next."

"Yes; but he is very ill," said the rector gravely. "I was sent for early this morning to visit the poor woman who lives by the west lake. As I was returning, I met Dr. Johnston, who had just been to see my little boy, and he tells me that he is very ill indeed. I thought I would call here, and ask you to let the groom drive me home. I shall reach the rectory so much more quickly."

Sir Rudolph insisted on driving him himself; and he left us all very sorrowful.

That evening we were just finishing dinner when a note came from the rectory which was addressed to me. It told the terrible news that little Willie was ill of small-pox of the malignant type. The nurse had taken him to some cottage where a woman lay stricken with it, and the child had caught the contagion. To add to the rector's distress, the nurse had fled from the house when she discovered what was the matter; the young house-maid, afraid of losing her good looks, also left at once, and there was no one to attend to his darling boy but the old housekeeper. I read the letter aloud, and then rose from my chair.

"Lady Culmore," I said, "will you let me go to the rectory? I will nurse the child; I am not afraid, and I love little Willie. He must not want for care."

Ah, there was the same strange light on her beautiful face that I had remarked before, the same clear, unearthly radiance in her eyes!

"No," she replied, "I will not let you go, Kate. If it be really malignant small-pox, it is very contagious and generally fatal."

A strong arm was thrown around me; I felt myself drawn close to a faithful, loving heart.

"You are not your own to do what you like with. You are mine, and I forbid you to go."

I clung to Ulric, weeping.

"The little child—I must go to the little child!" I sobbed.

"You shall not go near it," he said. "You are mine. There are plenty of clever, trained nurses who can do the work better than you. I will not let you risk your life."

We had forgotten the presence of others; we had forgotten everything except each other. An astonished cry from Lady Culmore roused me.

"Ulric—Kate!" she exclaimed.

My lover raised his drak, handsome, flushed face.

"I forgot," he said. "I was going to tell you this morning. You know nothing of this. Rudolph, my brother, Nest"—I noticed, even at that moment, that he did not say, "Nest, my sister"—"I love Kate, and she has promised to be my wife."

The next moment Sir Rudolph had crossed the room, and, taking me from Ulric's arms, kissed me.

"A good and charming wife you will have, Ulric," he said; and then a great sadness came over his face. I knew he was thinking of the time when he had made choice of a wife.

Lady Culmore came up to me hurriedly.

"Kate, I half guessed it. I was sure you loved some one. I have seen such a love-light in your eyes. I am very glad it is Ulric, for he will be so good to you."

She threw her arms around me, and, as she kissed me, I heard her sigh. Neither husband nor wife looked at each other. On Sir Rudolph's face there was an expression of great relief.

"Your news is good news to me, Ulric," he said—"very good news. Welcome, Kate!"—to me. And for the first time I noticed toleration in his eyes when he looked at Lady Culmore.

I thanked them for their kindly greeting, resolving in my heart that I would be a true and loving sister to them.

"But little Willie," I said—"we must not forget him. You who love me let me go to nurse him. I shall come back soon; I am not afraid. The little one will die without care."

"Once and for all, I say 'No!'" cried Ulric. You shall not go. I am sorry for the rector, sorry from my heart for the child; but I cannot sacrifice you for them. What do you say, Rudolph?"

"I say decidedly that she must not go," replied Sir Rudolph. "I will not hear of it."

Then Lady Culmore came to us.

"No, you must not go, Kate. For you are love, life, and brightness; for me—Ah, well, dear, you would fill any station far better than I should. I will go to nurse the sick child."

She turned to her husband, her face eagerly expectant. She went up to him with clasped hands. She did not touch him; one rebuff had been enough for her.

"Heaven has sent me this chance," she said. "You see it for yourself. Oh, let me go! Do not refuse me, Rudolph. It is my first prayer to you since—"

"Hush!" he said, but not unkindly. "Hush!"

"Let me go, Rudolph!" she cried. "Heaven has sent me this chance; let me avail myself of it. You know—you know"—and, as she bent her head near him, I heard her say, "a life for a life."

Let me save this one; let me give mine for it, if needs must be! Say that I may go, Rudolph!"

Still he hesitated, and a look came into his eyes that I had never seen there before. He must have loved her with desperate passion once.

"You ask me to let you go to certain death. Do you know that?"

"Yes, I know; but I may save a life. In any case, I shall offer mine for it. And, if I die, you will forgive me? Ah, do not turn from me, Rudolph, beloved; do not be angry with me! You will forgive me when I lie dying; and Heaven will be good to me, and let me die when I am looking on your face. Oh, beloved, I will die a hundred deaths for one word of pardon from you—a hundred deaths!"

His eyes were full of tears. I saw that he dared not trust himself to speak.

"Certain death has no fear for me with the prospect of your forgiveness and a farewell from you when I lie in the dark shadow. Oh, beloved, what is my life but living death? Oh, love, if I loved you less, I should suffer less! May I go?"

When I asked the question, he had answered promptly "No," when she asked it, he hesitated. Yet from that moment I knew that he loved her with his whole soul. What could possibly have come between these two who loved each other with so great a love? Ulric and I looked on, fascinated. They forgot us.

"Think," she said to him, "what an atonement it will be! When you remember my sin, you will remember also the amends I tried to make. Ah, beloved," she cried, bursting into passionate tears, "you told me yourself

"THINK," SHE SAID TO HIM, "WHAT AN ATONEMENT IT WILL BE!"

you could love me no more in life, but you might in death! Oh, that I might die—die by fire, by torture, by the sword, if with it I might have pardon from you and die looking on you! Rudolph, beloved, may I go?"

He was none the less a brave man that the tears fell from his eyes as he answered—

"Yes."

CHAPTER XV.

There was some little commotion in the household when it was known that Lady Culmore had gone to the rectory. Was the master mad, the servants asked each other, to let her go there when he new what had happened? A beautiful creature like that to go into the very arms of death?

Mrs. Harper came to me with tears in her eyes.

"I always thought it would end in this way!" she said. "You will see, miss, my lady will die. I say she is a saint and a martyr, let who will say different."

And, indeed, that seemed the only opinion about the matter. Small-pox had been almost unknown in the pretty town of Ulladale. Some poor girl born there had been in service in Liverpool, had come home ill with it, and from her the contagion had spread. The people were terrified. Neither for love nor money could the rector get anyone to go to his house.

Sir Rudolph was restless and miserable after his wife was gone. Ulric and I made no allusion to the discussion that had taken place between them. It was a sacred matter between husband and wife. Whatever wonder or curiosity it raised in us, we never spoke of it.

We were very dull at Ullamere, after Lady Culmore went. Happily one of the housemaids had no fear, and would accompany her, so that we had the comfort of knowing that she was not alone. Neither Sir Rudolph nor Ulric had any fear of contagion. They went over to the rectory two or three times every day. Lady Culmore never saw them: she would not leave little Willie, and the rector would not allow them to enter the house.

Day succeeded day, and still the little fellow lay battling with the fell disease. On all sides we heard hearty praises of Lady Culmore. Meanwhile a nurse from London had been installed at the rectory, but little Willie would have none of her. The servants said that Lady Culmore was giving her life for him, little knowing how true their words were. At first, none of the doctors had hope. Malignant small-pox at the age of 3 was most exceptional, and they did not see the slightest chance of recovery; but Lady Culmore's nursing was so invaluable that, if anything could save him, that would. Onlookers related afterward, with tears in their eyes, how she nursed and tended the little one; how she soothed his long agony; how she never left him, either by night or day, but was satisfied with broken snatches of sleep by his side; how the little fellow moaned for her, cried for her, and would never be pacified but by her.

It was an anxious time for us; and Sir Rudolph was most unhappy. At last news came from the rectory. Little Willie was decidedly better; he had asked for the kitten and for "Kate." Ulric's face cleared as he read the letter.

"We shall have some happy days yet," he said. "I shall be glad to see the child safe and well."

Years afterward I saw the letter that Lady Culmore wrote to her husband when the child was believed to be out of danger, little dreaming that, after all her care, he would be amongst the angels first.

"Beloved Rudolph.—Do you remember the words 'A life for a life?' I took away one; I have saved another. The child is out of danger, and will recover; but I am very ill. Shall I come home to die, or will my atonement be more complete if I remain away from you? Remember, you promised that I should die looking on your face. I feel that Heaven has forgiven me."

There was weeping and wailing at Ullmere when it was known that Lady Culmore lay at death's door. She had not been smitten down by small-pox, although she had hung over the child night and day, soothing him; but fever had stricken her. She had no warning of her coming illness. She fell one night as she was singing the child to sleep. She rallied sufficiently to write that letter, and she rallied no more.

Every precaution was taken, and Lady Culmore was brought to her old rooms in the eastern wing.

ULRIC'S FACE CLEARED AS HE READ THE LETTER.

She was alarmingly ill. The doctors called it low fever. I think that it was exhaustion, and that she had really given her life to the child. She had all her senses, all her faculties, but no strength. She could not raise her hands. To my intense delight, I was allowed to help in nursing her, and I tried my best to cheer her. The sun came shining into her room; the summer air was sweet now with heliotrope and mignonette. We could hear the birds singing, and the wind stirring the branches of the trees. But there were no terrible fancies now, there was no dream of a child's voice crying, or of a child's tiny hand rapping against the window pane. Sometimes in her sleep she spoke of little Willie.

One morning she called me to her. I knelt down by her side, and she drew my face down to hers.

"Kate," she said, "I loved you the first moment I saw you. I am so glad, my dear, that you will be Lady Culmore."

"I shall never be Lady Culmore," I said. "I am to be Ulric's wife."

"Rudolph will never marry again, and I am going to die," she replied. "You will be Lady Culmore, Kate, and I am glad of it. I wonder when I shall die? I am impatinet for the time, for I have a fancy that Rudolph will let me die in his arms. Let me know when the doctors tell you that my hour has come. When I am gone you will all know the truth about me. I could not bear that you should know it while I live; but you can not hurt me by words or looks when I am dead."

"Nor would I ever willingly hurt you at all," I said; but she whispered faintly—

"You do not know, dear; you do not know what I did."

"I do not care!" I cried impetuously. "I am quite sure you could not do anything very wrong."

"You think so," she murmured, with a faint wringing of the hands. "Kate, you will know my story some day; always remember that it was for his sake, because I loved him so. You must not forget."

Thinking over the whole story as I do now, I am sure that the best thing she could have done was to keep her sad story secret. Even loving her as I did, I could not, after I had heard it, have gone to her and kissed her. It was much better that we should not know the truth while she still lived. What could we have said to her?

One evening Lady Culmore was lying, as I thought, still; not a sound broke the silence. It was my turn to sit up with her, and one of the nurses sat in the adjoining room. I was thinking that Lady Culmore slept soundly—and was perhaps a trifle better, when suddenly she opened her eyes, with a bright, pleased, surprised smile. She half raised herself on her elbow and looked at the door. Even to this hour I can recall the thrill of horror that passed through me when I saw and heard her. With a bright smile she looked at the door, and held out her hands, as though in loving greeting.

"Little Willie," she exclaimed, in her low weak voice, "little Willie, how did you come here?" Her eyes seemed to follow some shadowy form, as though it moved from the door to her bedside. "Little Willie," she cried again, "what brought you here?" She seemed to wait for his answer; and then she added, "To take me with you—me? Are you quite sure, darling?" Another pause; then she said, "Of course I will. I must see Sir Rudolph; then I will come. Wait for me, little Willie."

I knew that he was at home in his little white bed, fast asleep, and well watched. I touched her gently.

"Lady Culmore," I said, "you are dreaming."

She looked at me, and I saw death in her eyes.

"I am not dreaming, Kate, I am wide awake. Do you see little Willie? There he stands, my dear, the little darling child. He says that he has come for me, that he has been sent for me—wretched, guilty, miserable me!"

"Dear Lady Culmore, you are dreaming," I said. "Little Willie is safe at home."

"She does not see you, Willie dear," she remarked, faintly, "but I do. Wait for me. Kate, call for Rudolph; the message has come."

Yes, there was death in her eyes, those beautiful eyes that had shed so many tears, and would shed no more. I roused the nurse and sent for Sir Rudolph and Ulric. Verily the hour was come.

In less than five minutes they were both in the room, and, looking at the white face on the pillow they saw at once that the Angel of Death stood over her.

"My poor Nest!" cried Sir Rudolph, and he sank upon his knees with a bitter cry.

Before I relate what happened next, let me say that the first news which reached us in the morning was that little Willie was dead. He had died quite suddenly in the middle of the night.

CHAPTER XVI.

Lady Culmore opened her eyes at the sound of her husband's voice, and laid her hand upon his bowed head.

"You will let me touch you, Rudolph," she said, "now that I am dying? You promised me forgiveness, and a last farewell. Oh, love, kiss me! Oh, love, how I have loved you!"

The sweet, faint voice sounded clearly and distinctly in the room. She looked round on Ulric and myself with loving eyes.

"You will tell them when I am dead," she said. "Tell them all the truth and let them judge me as they will. If I have sinned, I have suffered. To live near you always, to see you, to breathe the same air with you, to be called by your name, yet to be further apart from you than an utter stranger—oh, love, that has been torment to me! I have seemed to die every hour since that horrible night. I see my sin, my terrible sin, and I am glad to die." With a sudden accession of strength she rose and cried in a voice that was almost terrible, "Love, let me die in your arms!"

"Grant her request, Rudolph," said Ulric.

Sir Rudolph rose from his knees and took her in his arms. With a cry that I shall never forget, she laid her head upon his breast.

"Let me die looking on you," she said in a plaintive voice; and clasping her arms round him, she added: "Listen to me, beloved. Here, on my death bed, I avow the great sin of my life. It has been wild, mad, passionate love for you. I have given you the love I should have given to Heaven. I have lived for you, sinned for you—I die for you."

He bent down—ah, thank Heaven, he did it!—and kissed the pale lips. He whispered something to her, and she replied. Then I heard her say:

"Tell them as soon as I am dead, Rudolph, before you call strangers in."

She lay silent for some minutes, with a light of rapture on her face.

"At last—oh, my love, at last!" she said, "Rudolph, say once more that you forgive me."

"I forgive you, my darling," he answered, his voice trembling—"I forgive you. Die in peace; and may Heaven pardon you as I do."

I saw a smile pass over her pallid features; and she died, as she had prayed that she might, with her eyes fixed on his face.

"RUDOLF, SAY ONCE MORE THAT YOU FORGIVE ME."

He laid her down gently to rest, weeping such bitter, passionate tears as men seldom shed.

"Have I been too hard on her?" he cried. "Have I judged her too harshly? Was I too severe? Oh, Nest, it is all too late now."

Too late! Her ears were closed to all mortal sounds. Words of love or regret of passion or sorrow would reach her never more.

"A life lost, wrecked, ruined!" he said. "Oh, Nest, in our happy young days how little we dreamed of this! Mercy is best. I—I wish I had been more merciful. But she died as she wished to die."

Ulric and I stood by in silence. Sir Rudolph knelt down by the dead woman's side, and I can not think of his passion of grief now without tears.

The pent-up love of long months was lavished on her then. He kissed the white brow and the golden rippling hair, he called her by every endearing name. One such word a few short hours before would have flooded her whole soul wit hjoy; now the white face was still, and the lips that had sighed, pleaded and prayed, were closed forever.

"ate," whispered Ulric, "come away. We will leave him here."

But Ruloph looked up at us with weeping eyes.

"Nay," he said, "do not go yet. You know what she said. I was to tell you her story as soon as she was dead. Let me tell it to you now, and it will be buried within her."

"So, standing there, his hand clasping the hand of his dead wife, Sir Rudolph told us the story of her life and her sin.

When Sir John Culmore, father of Rudolph and of Ulric, died, he left three sons—the eldest, Richard, who succeeeded him; the second, Rudolph, who was then a captain in the army; the third, Ulric, my lover, who was a barrister practicing in town. When Sir John died, he was succeeded by his eldest son, who then became Sir Richard Culmore of Brooke. He was a kind, generous man, and devoted to his brothers. Captain Rudloph Culmore and Ulric spent the greater part of their leisure time at Brooke. Between the brothers the greatest possible affection—nay, the most tender love, existed.

They resembled each other greatly. They were tall, dark, handsome men, noble and generous. The two younger sons had but a very small patrimony. Rudolph lost the greater part of his money in some speculation by which he had hoped to double it; Ulric worked hard at his profession. Sir Richard was generosity itself. He insisted upon making both brothers a very handsome allowance. They were unwilling, to accept it, but they made a compromise. They agreed to take it until the elder brother married; then they persisted in saying, he would want it himself.

So it was arranged, and very happy they all were. At last Sir Richard, during one of his visits to London, fell in love with Ethel, daughter of Lady Hazlewood. Captain Rudolph Culmore, rendered curious by his brother's enthusiastic description of his betrothed, went to see her, and at once became a victim to the charms of her cousin, Nest Hazlewood, an orphan whom Lady Halewood had adopted when the girl't parents died. Sir Richard was delighted.

Calgary Herald: An east bound freight train drawn by engine No. 47, leaving Calgary Monday night about six o'clock, went through the big iron bridge over the Bow river, about three miles from the city. The bridge was undergoing repairs, and one of the piers had been taken out to be replaced with masonry. The engine and two cars were on the bridge when the western span sank some 30 feet, leaving the engine on the rails, with the front end reared up. A car of lumber and a box car loaded with ore, are also in the wreck, the care of ore being broken in two and the contents scattered around. INCORPORATION incorporation was that we could give inducements for the establishment of various businesses such as manufactures in the town. One or two he could mention had been already lost because we were not incorporated. He thought Revelstoke could get as businesslike and honest a council as any other town.

Mr. Fred. Fraser said that he had brought a few figures for the consideration of the meeting. Last year the town paid to the provincial government the following taxes:

Property tax	$1595 84
Hotel licenses	1200 00
Trading licenses	200 00
Wholesale liquor license	100 00
Police fines	74 00
Total revenue	$3169 84

The rate of government taxation was at $6 on the $1000. He estimated the revenue for the new city at the same rate as follows:

REVENUE, 1897.

1200 lots at $150—$180,000	$1080 00
Buildings, less church and government property—$200,000	1200 00
Personal property—$250,000	1500 00
Hotel licenses	1400 00
Traders' licenses	400 00
Pedlars, real estate agents and auctioneers	400 00
Circusses, shows, etc.	300 00
Gardeners, milkmen and teachers	500 00
Police court fines	200 00
	$6980 00
Less 25 per cent. to be refunded to the government	1745 00
	$5235 00

He estimated the expenditure of the new city at $10,740, leaving a deficit of $5505.

Mr. Sibbald said that Mr. Fraser himself had told him that the revenue for 1897 would reach at least $15,000. There were in reality 2000 lots in the town assessable. He would estimate a rate of 15 mills on the dollar and the total amount of real property taxable at $500,000, personal $300,000, which at 15 mills on the dollar would give $15,000; hotel and liquor licenses, $1,680; stores and boarding houses, $570; shows, etc., $200; Revelstoke Water, Power & Light Co., $600. Total, less personal tax, $10,550.

Mr. Fraser said that he himself had been under the impression that a large revenue could be collected without raising the taxation, but on going into the figures he found he was mistaken.

Mr. Graham gave the expenditure of the government in Revelstoke in 1895 at $1000, and in 1896 at $1740.

The motion was then put and declared carried by a considerable majority.

The following were then nominated for the committee: Messrs. Sprague, Hearn, Needham, Sibbald, Haig, Lindmark, H. J. Bourne.

The meeting then adjourned with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

PROVINCIAL SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor has been pleased to make the following appointments:—

29th October, 1897.

William Henry Vickers, Esquire, Mining Recorder at Trout Lake, to be a Collector under the "Revenue Act," and a Collector under the "Revenue Tax Act," for the Trout Lake and Lardeau Mining Divisions of the West Kootenay Electoral District.

Frederick Fraser, Esquire, J. P., Mining Recorder at Revelstoke, to be a Collector under the "Revenue Act" and the "Revenue Tax Act," and Deputy Registrar of the County Court of Kootenay, holden at Revelstoke. 17n2t

IN THE MATTER OF THE "PLACER MINING ACT (1891) AMENDMENT ACT, 1895" (SECTION 13), AND OF THE "MINERAL ACT, 1896" (SECTION 161).

Notice is hereby given that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor in Council has been pleased to repeal the regulation of the 15th day of December, 1896, with regard to relief against forfeiture owing to the lapse of a Free Miner's Certificate heretofore in force, and to make the following regulation in respect thereof, such repeal and new regulation to take effect on the 15TH DAY OF NOVEMBER, 1897:

Any person or joint stock company, being the holder of any mining property, desiring relief against the forfeiture of his or its interest in such property by reason of an omission to obtain a new free miner's certificate on or before the day following the expiration of the certificate, shall observe the following conditions:

1. Forthwith upon ascertaining the expiry of his certificate obtain a new one:

2. At the time of obtaining such new certificate file with the Recorder issuing the same, and post in the Record Office, a notice of his intention to apply for relief:

3. Within 30 days from such filing transmit to the Minister of Mines the following documents and fee:—

(a.) A statutory declaration setting forth the circumstances of such omission, with full particulars of the mining properties held by the applicant which would be affected with forfeiture:

(b.) A certificate under the hand of the Gold Commissioner or Mining Recorder of each division wherein any of the said properties is situate, that notice has been posted, and that no records (other than those mentioned in the said certificate, if any) adverse to the applicant's interest in the said properties have been made by him during the time in which the said applicant was not in possession of a valid existing free miner's certificate:

(c.) A declaration by the applicant, or his agent duly cognizant of the location of the ground of the applicant's properties, and the other facts affecting the case, that he has searched the records of claims recorded during the interval the applicant was in default, and that such claims do not (except as may be therein stated) conflict with or overlap any of the properties of the applicant:

(d.) The sum of five dollars.

The Minister of Mines may thereupon give instructions for the alteration of the date of the applicant's free miner's certificate so as to conform with the date of the expiration of the lapsed certificate, and may also give instructions for such amendment to be made to the records affected as may be considered requisite, and any such relief may be partial as to properties in respect whereof relief is given, or so as to save adverse rights acquired during default of the applicant.

Provincial Secretary and Minister of Mines. 17n2t
