C. B. Hume & Co,

LOYALTY AN INSULT.

For the first time in the history of Confederation the Dominion is confronted by the phenomenon of one of the two most important provinces ranging itself behind one political leader. Even in '96 when the school question furnished a reasonable excuse for the big majority given Mr. Laurier in Quebec, still there were 16 seats in that province held by Conservatives and this number had only been reduced by two up to the dissolution of parliament. Now we find practically the whole province supporting what we suppose must still be called the Liberal party, though that name can only be used for the sake of convenience. Some explanation has of course to be concocted to account for this startling condition of affairs and we are told that the insults of the Conservative press have driven the French Canadians into the arms of Laurier. This excuse is false. The French Canadians have not been made the subject of insults by the Conservative press. Great exception has doubtless been taken to certain seditious acts and utterances of a French Canadian minister of the crown. His conduct was of a character so openly disloyal, so impudently insulting to the English speaking portion of the population, so flagrantly misleading and so obviously intended to give a mischievous impression of Canadian feeling to the enemies of the Empire, that under any other flag than our own his public career would have ended there and then in the seclusion of some government fortress. It appears however that to take any exception to his behaviour is to be guilty of Francophobia and race-agitation. To venture to express an opinion however mildly that there is after all only one flag in Canada is to insult the tenderest feelings of Quebec. Not to hope with Mr. Tarte that a great and glorious destiny awaits Canada apart from the Empire and with the Anglo Saxon element eliminated or held down by the preponderating French majority is to stir up race animosity. Not to assent to the proposition that in the event of a war with France, Canada would remain neutral is to be guilty of an attack on the French Canadian people. It is quite true that the Conservative press of Ontario, Manitoba, the North west and British Columbia has been guilty of these enormities and Mr. Tarte, with the slimness of a born politician has twisted the protests against his own personal conduct as a Minister of the Crown into insults against the French Canadian race. He has persuaded the majority of his compatriots to take his view of the matter and by doing so has left them no alternative but to throw themselves into the arms of Laurier. But that there has been the smallest justification for their so doing in anything said by the Conservative leaders or the Conservative press is not the case. For the HERALD'S part it intends to maintain the idea that there is and can be only one flag throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion, that any destiny which awaits Canada is within the sacred circle of the Empire and that in the event of a war with France, Canada would remain neutral for the exact space of time during which the attention of Canadians was engrossed in getting any politician, who ventured to whisper the bare idea of neutrality, satisfactorily suspended by the neck. The HERALD entirely fails to understand how such self evident propositions can possibly hurt or insult any loyal citizen of this Dominion from Vancouver Island to Nova Scotia.

NOTE AND COMMENT

Dyment, Liberal, the old member, was re-elected in Algoma on Monday, making the Liberal total in Ontario 35, Conservative 54, Independent 2 and Nipissing to hear from. The election there will not take place until Dec. 12th. Klock, the Conservative candidate, was elected in '96 by a majority of 964. There are no changes in any of the other provinces and the Liberal majority stands at 45 over the Conservative total, leaving five Independents to one side.

Conservative gains and Liberal gains in Ontario are as follows: Conservative gains—Centre Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton (2,) Peel, Prince Edward, Frontenac, South Victoria, Cornwall, North Ontario, West Durham, East Hastings, East Lambton, South Grey, South Wentworth, North Middlesex, Centre Wellington, North Wellington, North Leeds and Grenville, Brockville, Cardwell, Lincoln, South Waterloo; total 23.

Liberal gains—London, South Wellington, Welland, South Renfrew, West Northumberland, Haldimand, Glengarry; total 7.

Putting aside the broader issues with which the peculiar features of the present Liberal majority confront us, from the point of view of the interests of the west, the situation is worthy of comment. Out of the 15 seats in the west, in which there has so far been an election held, only five straight government supporters have been returned, Sifton, Scott, Davis, Oliver and Morrison. The ten others have either returned opponents of the government, Prior, Earle, Lake, Lariviere, Roche, Haslam, Boyd and Richardson or Independents as Putter and Ralph Smith. There is here the nucleus of a western party, untrammelled by the bonds of the Grit machine, which by united action could compel the Laurier government to pay some attention to the just demands of the west. There can be very little doubt to judge from the experience of the past that the claims of Quebec and the Maritime provinces upon the gratitude of the administration will make it impossible for the demands of the west for assistance in the development of our resources to to gain much attention, unless the western members work together for this end.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY

Work of the Machime in Manitoba.—The Toronto News Regards the Situation With Apprehension.—The Montreal Gazette Sees Nothing for the Conservative Party to be Ashamed of.

In all its history, Canada has never come through an election that left so many reasons for apprehensions as the contest that closed yesterday. What the ultimate result will be of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's dividing the two races as he has done, it would require a prophet to tell, but it is an intolerable condition for the English-speaking Canadians to live under the domination of the French. The future hold out no prospect for the realization of those ambitions, the possession of which the French-Canadians gave evidence yesterday. We cannot but regard the defeat of the Conservative party as a calamity to Canada, inasmuch as it leaves in control of the Government men who have been proven to be unfaithful in their trust. But it is infinitely worse that the Government of the day should hold power by reason of the massing of one section of the community, speaking a foreign language, and holding ideas alien to the governing race in the country.—Toronto News.

"Looking at the result in all its aspects, it can be said, however, that while for the Conservative party, and, also for the country, there is much to regret, there is for the party little to be ashamed of. The Conservative party was the same from British Columbia to Nova Scotia. Its leaders spoke the same words in Quebec as in other provinces. The position it took was calculated to promote the great interests of the country, and of the Empire. It has suffered only a temporary defeat, and that even is due in large part to the fact that its opponents stood in many issues on its platform. It will look to the past without more regret than is justly caused by the overthrow in a fight for a good cause. It will look to the future with the confidence that its vindication will come sooner than perhaps many imagine."—Montreal Gazette.

The marked contrast between the result in the west and in the Dominion at large is most instructive. That the west has spoken on the policy of the government in western affairs with tolerable clearness and emphasis must be evident to the most superficial observer; but the full force of the verdict can be understood only when taken in connection with the tremendous outlay of money and energy, combined with every device that could be suggested by desperate unscrupulousness. This holds good of every constituency in the province where a machine nominee was in the field; in Lisgar the campaign of the machine closed in a carnival of iniquity, and in Brandon it attained the climax of unspeakable political debauchery. Had not the intelligent and uninfluenced electors been three to one in condemnation of the legislation, administration and political methods of the Minister of the Interior, the machine candidates would have swept the field.—Winnipeg Tribune.

Fight of His Life.

No Ontario Conservative, or at least no Conservative in the Toronto district, has come through the fight with more, or, in fact, as much, honour as Hon. N. Clark Wallace.

The importance of Mr. Wallace to his party is perhaps best ganged by the intensity of the Government's exertions to defeat him. The government was anxious not so much to exalt Archibald Campbell as to destroy Clark Wallace.

No public man was ever the object of a more formidable attack. All the power of the Government was arrayed against him, and the human agencies which were employed to accomplish his overthrow were in effect an acknowledgment of his usefulness to the Conservative party.

West York, next to Centre Toronto, perhaps, is the most vulnerable point in the Conservative lines in this district. Mr. Wallace was able to beat back the attack in the strength of his party and in the strength of elements outside his party, which rallied to the support of a man who had proved his independence.

The independence of Hon. N. Clarke Wallace should not begin and end with his stand against the Remedial Bill. He has a wide and thorough knowledge of the trade question, and if he were less willing, for the party's sake, to fill a gap without notice, he would devote more time to the preparation of his speeches, and these speeches would be an audible proof of an ability which is surpassed by few men in public life in Canada. It is his time now to strike out on his own line and to stand for the people no matter what the party does.—Toronto Telegram.

Hidden Treasure.

A foot of ore has been recently struck by Jack Stobart, on the centre claim of the Hidden Treasure group, which is situated about a mile from the east shore of Trout Lake on the next divide from the Silver Cup and in close proximity to the Lucky Jim, Triune and Cromwell properties. The ore was struck in the tunnel, which is now in 80 feet. The property has been under bond to an English Syndicate, who threw it up this summer. Jack Stobart uncovered the vein after doing only four feet of work.

COMMERCIAL EMPIRE

What the Development of the Big Bend by Road and River Means.

Speaking to the HERALD the other day Mr. Thos. Taylor expressed himself as certain of getting the balance of the appropriation to carry the Big Bend road as far as Carnes Creek at the next session. This is very satisfactory and coupled with the commencement of the work on the road this fall will have the effect of turning the eyes of the people of Revelstoke towards the upper river country with renewed expectation.

In the meantime the Board of Trade will do its utmost to get a steamer placed on the river to ply between the landing at Eight Mile and Laporte next season. Such a steamer would stimulate activity in the mines in the Laforme, Carnes Creek, Standard Basin and Keystone Mountain camps enormously and would no doubt be largly availed of by prospectors desirous of exploring the large areas of country still open to prospect in the Big Bend country. It would also assist the placer mining syndicates at work on Smith Creek in getting in their supplies and would doubtless tend to form depots at Carnes Creek, Laporte and other points where forage and supplies of all kinds might be landed so as to be available even after navigation had closed. The HERALD is confident that a medium sized steamboat would find plenty of work from the start and would itself be the means of stimulating so much activity in mining and other directions in the district as to create a large and constantly increasing business for itself. The field is so large and contains so many properties, which nothing but the lack of easy means of communication prevents from being worked, that it impossible exactly to estimate to what extent at present unthought of business the mere presence of such a boat on the river would work up, even in the very first season. Without therefore wishing to enter into any controversy on the relative merits of river versus road as a means of developing the country, the HERALD wishes to see a steamer placed on the upper river next season, as well as to see the wagon road extended at least as far as Carnes Creek. The country needs both. It is not likely that the wagon road will reach further than Carnes Creek next season but the steamer will give easy access as far as Laporte, which will be invaluable for at least two seasons and will, the HERALD believes, be found of immense assistance during the season of navigation for so long after as the road remains the only other means of communication even as far as the head of Death Rapids. We shall need both road and river until both are superseded by a railway. Even after that, if the placer camps in the Smith Creek district are found under development to carry out their present promises, a steamboat will be of immense assistance in giving easy access to mining properties on that side of the river. There are in fact such infinite possibilities in the Big Bend country that it is hard to over estimate the chances for investment in furnishing quick and easy methods of communication within it. The outlook is not confined to developing a few mining properties. The chance is offered for pioneering transportation into a commercial empire. What with her mineral resources in gold, silver, lead and copper, the surface indications of which, only half explored as they are, outclass anything yet found in Kootenay, what with her extensive limits of timber, what with the large areas of rich grazing lands in the Fraser and Canoe river valleys, what with the incalculable value of the immense deposits of high grade mica in the Tete Jaune Cache district, we have in the country extending 150 or 200 miles north of Revelstoke, a section, which for variety and wealth of resources has not its equal in the province. There cannot be much risk in investing money in furnishing such a district with means of communications.

Latest Returns.

Douglas is in in East Assiniboia by 137 and McCreary in Selkirk by 19. Official returns give Erb, Liberal, South Perth, on the other hand two seats in Prince Edward's Island, which were counted to the Liberals, are now claimed by the Conservatives. The Mail and Empire makes the Conservative majority in Ontario 22 and expects to see it go up to 26 before the returns are finally settled.

The Lardeau Railway.

A party of C. P. R. engineers under Mr. Young came in on Tuesday last, to commence the work of cross-sectioning the upper part of the line. DOWN TO BUSINESS

The Conservative party has been defeated at the polls. The country has given its decision and Sir Wilfrid Laurier returns to power with a majority exactly equal to the number of the Liberal seats in the province of Quebec.

Whether this is a condition favorable to the best interests of the country is a question which the electors will have ample time to consider. The fact, however, remains that Sir Wilfrid owes his success entirely to Quebec which has elected a solid phalanx of Liberals.

As far as the Conservative party in Alberta is concerned it has nothing to apologize for and nothing to take back. Mr. Bennett was a candidate by whom any constituency might be proud to be represented. He fought a splendid fight against the greatest odds, and neither he nor his friends have uttered a single word on or off the platform of which they need to be ashamed. The Herald is proud to have supported him and to have to some extent assisted him in his candidature.

The elections are now practically over, and it becomes necessary to turn to the less exciting events of human life. We have been beaten but not by any means disgraced, and as The Herald can boast of many hundreds of readers among both political parties it proposes to resume business at the old stand and to supply the public with an enlarged and up-to-date news service, accompanied by such editorial comments as we believe to be in the general interests of the West.

WEDNESDAY'S ELECTION

The result of yesterday's election indicates the return of Mr. Oliver by a greatly reduced majority.

The trend of public sentiment in the district previous to the election suggested to almost every observer that Mr. Bennett would be returned. To counteract this force it became evident to Mr. Oliver's friends that it would become necessary to head off public opinion and sentiment and in consequence every questionable influence was called into action to effect Mr. Bennett's defeat.

Immediately before election day there was a marshalling in the district of the officials both in the district and from out of it. The "machine" was called into action and emigration agents from the east who at previous times had been employed in locating the foreign population within the district were summoned to bring their influence and the party's terrorism upon the foreign settler. The scrip commission had been at work for weeks in traversing the district and the report was circulated with the stamp of officialism upon it that the half breed who had no obained his scrip would not receive it except he voted for Oliver.

The machine in the district threatened Conservative officials that if they dare vote at all at yesterday's election they would lose their position. Violent partisans were appointed deputy returning officers who refused to allow Conservative voters to cast their votes, who permitted Mr. Oliver's scrutineers to threaten arrest to voters who took the oath and who in many cases left nothing undone to prostitute their position to throttle the freedom of the man who sought to exercise his franchise against the Liberal party.

Grit justices of the peace were appointed scrutineers for Mr. Oliver, some of whom brought with them prepared warrants for the purpose of intimidating under the threat of arrest the citizen of this so-called free country, who exercised his right to vote by taking the oath, which was in almost every case administered to the Conservative voter.

The Grit election fund was called upon for the sinews of war and the money of the machine with its baneful influences was apaprent in all directions. Never in the history of our political institutions has such an attempt been made, and with success, to deprive the independent voter of his right of franchise.

The north has again triumphed over the south, notwithstanding the fact that during Mr. Oliver's representation of this district central Albertan has never received the slightest recognition of assistance from the government, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Oliver has ignored the demand made in this district for provincial autonomy for the district of Alberta and notwithstanding his absolute impotency to do anything for this district, yet the Grit party of central Alberta has again pronounced themselves in favor of being represented by a man who never has been, and never can be of any assistance in promoting our provincial interests.

If the Liberal party in this district are satisfied with this condition of things and place the interests of the machine in advance of Calgary becoming a capital and Alberta a thriving province then let our interests be entirely submereged to the interests of the machine and of the continuance of Mr. Tarte and his anti-British confreres in office.

No man is quite so important as he would like others to think he is.

News from Manitoba, says the Hamiltno Spectator, is to the effect that the Tories have been able to Win a peg.

It is not to the credit of Canada that pro-Boers like Bourassa and Monet were re-elected by large majorities in Quebec.

It is the opinion of the Winnipeg Telegram that Hugh John Macdonald will be member for Brandon after the courts have investigated the election.

Toronto Telegram: The Hon. Thos. Greenway was never as great a man as Julius Caesar, but in the light of recent bye-elections he appears to be just as truly dead.

The Winnipeg Free Press of the day after the election succeeded in achieving the questionable honor of crowding into one issue more filthy blackguardism than was ever published in a single paper in Western Canada. "Nothing left of Tupper but a grease spot." "The blatherskite of the West permanently shut up by Scott"—these are samples of the choice sentiments in which the leading Liberal organ of Manitoba voices its party's victory. The language is quite worthy of the paper which publishes it.

MR. FOSTER'S SENTIMENTS

St. John, N.B., Nov. 10.—Hon. Mr. Foster says: "We have been defeated in New Brunswick by too much Blairism and Tarteism, but we shall send five good men to parliament to keep alive the honorable traditions of the Conservative party in this province. Don't imagine we are discouraged: not a bit of it. Laurierism is a disease, and like the measels must have its run but the body political will soon return to its condition.

"Ontario's condemnation is the grim sceptre which haunts the feast even now, a ghostly reminder of what is ultimately in store for the pledge breakers and sham purists. Many most excellent men have been added to the ranks of our militant parliamentary body, which will be ready to meet the victors at Ottawa. Let us draw our ranks close and begin this very day a contest to combat corrupt principles, constant in action, at Ottawa."

HE DROWNED THE BUFFALO.

A Texas Stockman's Story of an Experience in the Little Arkansas.

A group of cattlemen at the live stock convention at El Reno were talking about the skill of Oklahoma cowboys in throwing the lariat when R. E. Word, Sr., whose home is at Higgins, Tex., but whose cattle are mostly in Oklahoma, said: "I had an experience roping when I was a young man which put me through a lively gait. As a Texan who had followed the range all his life, I felt that there was not a broncho on top of the ground that could throw me and nothing on four legs that I couldn't rope and tie. In the summer of 1871 I was on the Little Arkansas river about five miles south of Wichita, Kan. I had a splendid horse, trained for the range and almost as intelligent as a man. One afternoon I came suddenly upon five big buffalo bulls that had wandered away from the main herd. I pulled my pistol, killed one of them and, not having time to reload, decided to rope one. Shortly afterward I found myself with a big job on my hands.

"At the first throw my rope dropped around the old bull's horns. Now, when a buffalo makes up his mind to go anywhere in a rush he travels in a straight line. You may be able to turn him a little, but in the main he will keep his course. That was what this bull did. He headed toward the Little Arkansas, with the evident intention of crossing it. My horse, always fearless when handling cattle, was timid when in close quarters with a buffalo, and I was unable to check the bull, who soon had me going south at a lively clip. I was becoming of the opinion that the only way out of my trouble was to cut my rope and let the bull carry it off.

"The Little Arkansas is narrow in places, while at no great distance away will be found pools four and five feet deep and from 25 to 40 feet wide. The bull rushed headlong into one of these pools. The opposite bank was perpendicular and about a foot and a half above the water. Taking in the situation quickly, I saw that I could run out my rope far enough to enable my horse to cross at a narrow, shallow place. He jumped across, in fact, ahead of the bull, which had to wade. My horse had to keep going and jerked the rope taut just as the bull started to climb up the bank. The jerk pulled the bull's nose into the water and his shaggy head against the perpendicular bank. He made a great uproar, but my horse held him there as in a vise. Strange as it may seem, I succeeded in keeping that bull's nose under water until he drowned. I always regarded this as my most brilliant feat of roping."—Oklahoma Cor. in Kansas City Star.

PEOPLE WHO SYNDICATE SORROW.

Not Apt to Be Popular With Their Fellow Men.

The most selfish man in the world is the one who is most unselfish—with his sorrows. He does not leave a single misery of his untold to you or unsuffered by you. He gives you all of them. The world becomes to him a syndicate formed to take stock in his private cares, worries and trials. His mistake is in forming a syndicate; he should organize a trust and control it all himself; then he could keep every one from getting any of his misery.

Autobiography constitutes a large part of the conversation of some people. It is not really conversation—it is an uninteresting monologue. These people study their individual lives with a microscope, and then they throw an enlarged view of their miseries on a screen and lecture on them as a stereopticon man discourses on the microbes in a drop of water. They tell you that they "did not sleep a wink all night;" they "heard the clock strike every quarter of an hour." Now, there is no real cause for thus boasting of insomnia. It requires no peculiar talent—even though it does come only to wide awake people.

If you ask such a man how he is feeling, he will trace the whole genealogy of his present condition down from the time he had the grip four years ago. You hope for a word; he gives you a treatise. You asked for a sentence; he delivers an encyclopedia. His motto is, "Every man his own Boswell." He is syndicating his sorrows.

Too Frank.

A clothing merchant in lower Broadway had a big lot of suits of clothes that he had bought at a bargain, and by putting a price of $15 on each he thought they would sell rapidly, for they were of exceptionally good value for the money. He put one of the suits on a form and set it in front of his store, with a sign about its neck which one of his smart clerks had painted on a piece of cardboard. This announced the price. Then he and his clerks prepared to do a rushing business.

The hours passed on, and no one came in to buy the suits. This caused the merchant to wonder, and at length he determined to go out and take a look at the sample suit and the sign. This is what he found on the sign: "These Suits $15. They Won't Last Long." Pedestrians passing by saw the sign and smiled at its frankness.

The merchant tore the sign from the suit, and the clerk who designed it started out to look for another job.—New York Mail and Express.

The Japs' Inner Circle.

The Japan Daily Mail said recently: To eat with chopsticks and sit on mats and wear big sleeved coats do not bring a man any nearer to genuine intimate intercourse with the Japanese people. The language is also needed. Yet, even when the language is added, something still remains to be achieved, and what that something is we have never been able to discover, though we have been considering the subject for 30 years. No foreigner has ever succeeded in being admitted to the inner circle of Japanese intercourse.

Bad Bargain.

Mr. Slummer—Your story is not a very plausible one.

IRVING TO M'KINLEY

Liverpool, Nov. 8.—Sir Henry Irving sent the following telegram to President McKinley:

"My warmest, most respectful greeting to you, honored sir. My congratulations on the high honor paid you a second time by your great nation."

President Loubet also sent his felicitations to the president.

She: And did you light the fire with kerosine, too? He: No; I smoked while I was putting gasoline in the automobile

AT A TICKET WINDOW

HOW SOME WOMEN KILL TIME AND MAKE EVERYBODY NERVOUS.

They Seem to Be Afraid the Ticket Man Will Swindle Them—How the Average Woman Traveler Worries Without Reasonable Cause.

The man at the little window of the box office sighed wearily. He is usually a cheery sort of fellow, but his patience is only that of a mortal, and it had been sorely tried.

It was by a woman patron who had just passed on and out of the door. Next came a good natured looking man, who sang out: "Hello, Charlie! Give me two of the best seats you have." He laid a bill down, and "Charlie" slipped two tickets from a package and put them into an envelope. The good natured looking man made a few pleasant remarks about the play that was billed for the week and moved on to make room for others.

Now, I would not ask that when a woman stops at a theater box office to buy her own matinee ticket for the next day—and women may do this nowadays—she assume altogether the manner of a man on the same errand, but—I am only voicing the request of the box office clerk—I would remind her that it would be only considerate if she should show a certain amount of reasonable confidence in the man who sells the tickets.

Have you ever watched the average woman buying a theater ticket?

When a man buys a ticket, he says: "Give me the best dollar and a half seat"—or a dollar seat, as the case may be—"in the house," and then rather goes on faith that it will be a passably good one.

When a woman buys a ticket, she gazes at the diagram of the house, which is usually Greek to her anyway, and selects, and then changes her mind, all the while entertaining a sort of lurking suspicion that the clerk is keeping the best from her or that she must insist upon getting the best or they will be given to some one else. One would think from her excitement that she must be wary or she will be seated in some dark, damp dungeon, when, as a matter of fact, nearly every seat in a modern theater is passably good; though, of course, certain ones are to be preferred to others, and no one can blame a purchaser for careful buying.

Now, my dear, fussy woman, let me tell you that the man at the box office is always glad to seat you as comfortably as possible, for it is a part of his business to see that patrons are well served.

And the man at the railroad ticket office, too, knows his business too well to send you away on a wrong route. So do not keep him standing talking for half an hour giving you a history of the road and a description of every point at which it touches. And do try to have a little consideration for the crowd of busy and hurried people you may possibly be keeping waiting by your unnecessary flutters.

The average woman invests in tickets like she would in some great, deep mystery. She is not accustomed to paying out money for little slips of paper. She usually has yards of material, packages of bonbons or household goods to show at once for her expenditures. Now, a man is more used to doing business with more or less "risks."

When a woman is given a check, she is never quite at ease until it is converted into cash. Tickets and checks are such little, worthless looking things to mean the much they often do mean.

It may be a difficult thing for a woman to overcome that inborn feeling that she must be very, very cautious else some one will impose upon her, but I do contend that a woman who feels herself independent enough and capable of purchasing tickets for herself to see anything she wishes to see, or go any place she wishes to go, should school herself to put flutters aside.

The average woman—I say average because there are some exceptional women who do not flutter at any and all times—undergoes unutterable nerve strain because of her foolish anxiety about many things that she has paid very reliable people a sum for looking after for her.

The average woman traveler separated from her baggage for hours after boarding a train has a haunting fear that she may never see her clothes again. It is hours before she can settle comfortably in her chair for wondering whether or not the train will stop for dinner, and if it does she wonders will it be safe for her to leave the train, for she fears that if she does she may not get back to it in time. Then the porter comes her way, and she plies him with questions and finally leans back in exquisite contentment when that functionary informs her that there is a stop of one hour for dinner at Jefferson City. Then, if it were not for that little, undefined fear about the trunks, she could be quite happy until the sun goes down and she begins to worry about getting up in time in the morning to comb her hair and fasten her shoes before quitting the train. Then there is the thought that the engineer may be a little careless about running his train.

All of this, my dear woman traveler, is bad—exceedingly bad—for your nerves, and all of this has not been because you were a novice in traveling. You have taken many trips before, but there is that old, "unprotected" feeling that must have been handed down to womankind from Mother Eve, for it will assert itself every now and again. It may never be entirely overcome, but I do insist that it may be curbed, and that, too, to the rest and comfort of the one who makes the effort.—Margaret Hannis in St. Louis Republic.

Laundering Flannels.

To shake flannels thoroughly lessens the difficulty of washing them. An expert in laundering flannels advises the soaking of those that are very much soiled for half an hour in a strong solution of soap water that is lukewarm and contains a tablespoonful of powdered borax. The vessel should be covered to hold such heat as the water possesses. After soaking squeeze and pull gently between the hands, immersing frequently, taking care only that no soap is rubbed on the flannels and that no board is used with them. If very much soiled, they should be washed through two soapy waters kept at the same temperature, then rinsed through two more clear but no cooler waters. It is better after pressing out as much water as is possible to shake them for the riddance of further moisture. If they are passed through the wringer, they should be smoothly laid and not subjected to the greatest pressure of the rollers. Dry them in the house or in a bright, breezy air. They should be very lightly pressed in ironing.

BRYAN'S CONGRATULATIONS

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 8.—William Jennings Bryan telegraphed President McKinley today as follows:

"At the close of another presidential campaign it is my lot to congratulate you upon your second victory."

"You know the fat policeman on our beat?" "I have seen him." "Well, the other night, he chased two thieves around the block, and they ran so fast, and he ran so slow that on the second round they caught up with him—and he promptly arrested the offenders."

MICROBE PROFESSOR'S THEORY.

He Alleges That He Can Tell a Man's Malady by His Shoes.

"Have you ever noticed," said the microbe professor, "that people suffering from dyspepsia slide their feet when they walk? No? Well, they do, and I will explain it. After a lifelong study of the subject I am able to say that I know what I am talking about, and the medical books and doctors be blowed!

"The microbes which cause dyspepsia enter the human system only between the toes. If a man had no toes or could walk on his hands, he would never be troubled with that nightmare of all diseases in the catalogue. The microbes entering the system through the toes as they do, the feet are first to feel the effect of them. When they reach the stomach, the entire body, of course, becomes affected, and the heavy feeling is general. But you will never see a dyspeptic who lifts his feet in a sprightly manner when he walks.

"I can sit here in my office and point out the ills of men and women as they pass along the street with as much precision as the best physician can after a careful and tedious diagnosis. Take a person with influenza or 'grip.' Just the opposite of the dyspeptic. Instead of dragging his feet he steps as high as a blind horse, all because the germs are in his head and his feet appear to be seven pounds each lighter than they ought to be. You have noticed it in your own case the morning after a celebration, when your head is heavy. Your feet will go a foot too high when you attempt to step upon the curb.

"Itheumatics always walk on the outside of their feet—that is, their ankles turn outward, while people affected with heart disease turn their ankles the other way. A man who has catarrh always wears the backs off the heels of his shoes, and one with weak eyes turns his toes in. A sufferer from any pulmonary disease walks largely on his toes. This comes from his continued gasping for breath.

"A deaf person always stamps his feet when walking, and one who has liver complaint takes short, irregular steps. I could go through the entire list of human ills and name the characteristic of each in relation to the feet. For the human citadel first begins to weaken at the bottom, and there the microbes make their first attack in many cases. Of course some microbes enter the system only through the palms of the hands, others through the eyelids, and others still under the finger nails.

"But give me a man's shoes in any case, and I will name his malady."—Kansas City Times.

FISHING IN POLYNESIA.

Natives Hook the Finny Tribes With Fishhooks Grown on Trees.

A party of palu fishers are ready to set out from the little island of Nanomaga, the smallest but most thickly populated of the Ellice group. The night must be windless and moonless, the latter condition being absolutely indispensable, although, curiously enough, the fish will take the hook on an ordinary starlight night. Time after time have I tried my luck with either a growing or a waning moon, much to the amusement of the natives, and never once did I get a palu, although other nocturnal feeding fish bit freely enough, notably a monstrous species of sea perch called la-hen.

The tackle used by the natives is made of cocoanut sennit, four or eight stranded, of great strength and capable of holding a 15 foot shark, should one of these prowlers seize the bait. The hook is made of wood—in fact, the same as is used for shark fishing—about one inch and a half in diameter, 14 inches in the shank, with a natural curve, the barb, or rather that which answers the purpose of a barb, being supplied by a small piece lashed horizontally across the top of the end of the curve.

These peculiar wooden hooks are grown. The roots of a tree called ngua, whose wood is of great toughness, are watched when they protrude from a bank and trained into the desired shape. Specimens of these may be seen in almost any ethnographical museum. To sink the line coral stones of three or four pounds' weight are used, attached by a very thick piece of sennit, or bark, which, when the fish is struck, is always broken by its struggles and falls off, thus releasing the line from an unnecessary weight. It is no light task hauling in a thick, heavy line hanging straight up and down for a length of from 75 to 100 fathoms or more

Cut and Was Cut.

A card sharper who had evidently been doing the races joined a small group of farm servants in a public house. Failing to interest the company in the mysteries of the three card trick, he, in apparent sheer desperation, exclaimed:

"Well, look here, chaps, I'll bet any of you 5 shillings I can cut the ace of spades, any of you to shuffle and arrange a pack of cards as you like," at the same time producing the pack, which he pushed toward a likely victim, who agreed to accept the wager, took up the pack, shuffled them and then placed them on the table.

The sharper then took his knife and cut his pack clean through, at the same time saying: "There! I've cut the ace!"

"Nay, that you haven't," quietly replied the yokel. "The ace o' spades is up my sleeve. See?"—London Answers.

An Actress' Gowns.

Your gowns at this stage of your existence may cause you great anguish of mind. I do not refer to their cost, but to their selection. You will not be allowed to say, "I will wear white," or "I will wear pink," because the etiquette of the theater gives the leading lady the first choice of colors, and after her the lady next in importance, you wearing what is left. In some New York theaters actresses have no word in the selection of their gowns. They receive "plates" from the hand of the manager and dress accordingly.

Russia's National Tipple.

Vodka is the destroyer of national character and domestic happiness in Russia. This deadly drink is seen on every table. It is simply another name for spirits of wine very little modified. Thousands of Russians every year become confirmed vodka drunkards, chiefly through the severity of the winter. It is a singular fact that religion and intemperance are closely allied together in Russia. Drunkenness is not accounted at all sinful by the vast majority of even the religious people.—New York Tribune.

CORONER'S INQUEST

On the Body of James S. Huggard, the Nose Creek Farmer.

Yesterday the coroner, Dr. Sanson, commenced an inquest touching the death of James S. Huggard, who was brutally murdered at Nose Creek on the evening of the 7th instant. The following composed the jury: John Gibson, foreman, R. Wigmore, William Elliott, Geo. Simpson, John Christie, Guy Owen.

The first witness called was John Walter Stephens, who being duly sworn, stated: At sun down Huggard passed me on the trail leading to his hay camp, about one and a half miles from the camp. I asked when I would get my load of hay. He said I could get a good load off the stack that I loaded off in the morning. I said I had to grease my wagon tonight so as to be in time in the morning. He said he would send Roy to the stack with axle grease and that he would go ahead and get supper ready. He then went on in the direction of the camp. I watered my horses at a coulee and went to the stack, but Roy was not there. I waited for five or six minutes. Then I thought I would load up, as there was enough grease for the wagon. I had about three-quarters of my load on when Roy came galloping on his horse. He said: "Mr. Huggard is dead or dying" and jumped off the horse. I jumped on the horse and started to the camp. I found Huggard dead. The body was lying on its back with a small quantity of hay under the head. I called his name a couple of times. I then felt his hands and they seemed to be cold, and then his heart. I felt under his vest. It was warm there. I told Roy that I would go down to Mr. Lewis and get them to take word to Mrs. Huggard. I recognize the axe. I saw it last lying on some harness near Huggard's body and saw there was blood on the blade, also the hat.

Examined by Inspector Wilson: I am Huggard's brother-in-law and am employed by him to haul hay from his hay camp. Mr. Huggard passed me last night at a coulee. He was in a buggy. It took me 15 or 20 minutes to drive from the coulee to the hay stack. I was at the hay stack about half an hour till Roy came, so that from the time Huggard left me till I heard of his death was about 45 minutes. Mr. Huggard has enemies. Murray Woods is one. I heard Murray Woods say he would tramp Huggard through the earth if he could get hold of him. This was about a year ago. I am not friends with Murray Woods. There have been disputes between Huggard and Carson. I heard Mr. Huff say that he would knock Huggard's brains out. This was about two months ago. Mr. Huff had a large stone in both his hands and threatened to throw it at Huggard. Huggard was perfectly sober when I saw him last. I consider Carson and Huff enemies of Huggard. I don't believe that Huggard took the harness off the horses himself. He had a large mit on right hand when I found him and his left thumb was broken. Nobody passed me on the trail that night but Huggard.

Roy Amos Wilson, sworn, stated: About 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon I started off to drive the cattle back off the hay stacks. About 6:30 p.m. heard a wagon going along the trail and I heard the driver's voice talking to the horses. Returning to camp about 7 p.m. I found Huggard lying down with his head in a pool of blood, went to the house for water, and washed the blood off his face. I did not know he was dead. His hands were cold. I rode over to Mr. Stephens, who was at a hay stack about 500 feet away, and told him that Mr. Huggard was either dead or dying. He took my horse and rode to the hay camp. this was about 7:15 p.m. Blood was not running from the wound at the time, but by raising the head blood spurted from the nose. Mr. Huggard was having trouble with Carson and Huff over a hay deal. Mr. Huggard had no enemies in the neighborhood.

Questioned by the jury witness replied: I was driving the cattle away from the hay stacks. When raising the face I got down on one knee and held his head on my left arm. I moved the body about two yards.

In reply to Inspector Wilson witness stated: I was working for Huggard as chore boy since last July. When I found the body it was lying on its left side. Mr. Huggard came home in a buggy. The buggy was near the small shack. The horse was quite a piece behind the buggy. The horse had collar on with reins hanging and feeding about 14 yards behind the buggy. The balance of the harness was lying close to the little shack with an axe on top of it. The axe and harness was about a yard back from Huggard's head. I did look at the axe last night and saw blood on the blade. When Huggard fell if blood had spurted towards the axe the handle would have been stained with it. I removed the harness and found one drop of blood on it and on part of the belly band. There were spots of blood about a foot behind the head on the hay, but not further away. Mr. Huggard owes me about three months wages. I am an American and 16 years of age. I did not see any one round the camp all day yesterday. I had a conversation with Carson lately. He said that Huggard had sold the hay. When I said that Huggard had told me he had not done so. Carson told me if the case came into court, not to tell any lies. I said I will only swear what is true. Carson told me Mr. Huggard was a liar and a cheat. Huff said to me one day that if I didn't say that Huggard had sold them the hay he would jerk me off the saddle and hang me on the horn. This was about four or five months ago. Carson and Huff never offered me money to lie for them.

At this stage of the proceedings the case was adjourned until this afternoon at 3, when the medical testimony will be taken at the police court.

Coroner Dr. Sanson resumed the enquiry touching the death of Jas. S. Huggard at 2 p.m. on Friday at the city police court.

The first witness called was Jas. Chisholm, who, being sworn in due form said: On the 7th November Mrs. Owens and I were alone in my house. Mrs. Gibson has a boy who comes over often to my ranche. Mr. and Mrs. Owens' son went out skating on a pond 200 yards from the house and I remained in the house until 8 o'clock when I went out. When opening the door I heard a voice. I said: "Is that you, Andrew?" but saw the man was not tall enough for Andrew. The wind was blowing from me to him. Asked him to speak louder and understood him to say he wanted to know where the crossing of the creek was. I told him where to go, to a place where a plank was, a safe crossing. He started off to go, when he got about half way to the chicken house, I said, "Are you Mr. Owens?" He said: "No it is Hanson." Whenhe got about to where the crossing was I called out to him asking if he had found it, and he said "Yes." He must have gone across the field towards Peterson's.

In reply to Inspector Wilson the witness stated: His voice was a shrill and clear voice and he was going from east to west. It would be about three miles from my place to Huggard's camp.

As far as I could recognize the voice it was the voice of Frank Smith.

Guy Owen, sworn: I know Smith. He left my place three weeks ago to hunt cattle. He was hunting some cattle to kill. He told me if he could not come it he would shoot them with a big revolver he had. I have no knowledge that he carried a revolver. Smith told me that Huggard and Stephens were doing him out of a horse deal.

George Simpson, the next witness, stated: On the 7th inst at 4 p.m. I left town after polling my vote in company with Mr. Ellison. We caught up with F. Smith and passed the time of day with him. I asked him where he lived and he replied that he lived with Peterson's. When he got out he told me he would go round to Grafton's on his way back to Peterson's. I wanted to get rid of him. We met a man on a grey horse shortly afterwards. Smith told me he had had trouble with Huggard over a grey mare. I have known Smith for some time. The man we met was Mr. Morden. When we came to Huggard's house he said: "Is that Huggard and Stephens." he took a parcel and jumped out of the wagon. Smith was sober. I offered him a drink. When we met Morden Smith said if it is Stephens "God help him." In a jocular way I offered him an axe handle telling him he had better take it. He said he had worked for Peterson's. We saw Smith afterwards about one mile back keeping to Huggard's trail.

In reply to Inspector Wilson, witness said. About 5 o'clock Smith left us three miles from Huggard's. When he offered Smith the axe handle he refused it. I thought he intended to settle his trouble with his fists. Smith said: "God help Huggard or Stephens if I should meet them." As to my own knowledge I do not know if Smith carries a revolver.

The next evidence before the medical evidence was put in was Wm. Ellison, who stated that he heard Simpson's evidence aid heard most of the conversation with Smith. Smith did say: "God help Stephens or Huggard if I meet them." This was on the evening of the 7th of November last.

The Medical Evidence

Geo. MacDonald, M.D., of Calgary, who assisted at the post mortem examination said he made the examination on the body of James Huggard, assisted by Dr. Ings. That the wound from the axe might have been made before or after death, he could not say which. The blow of the axe alone he thought would be sufficient to cause death and he did not think that the wounds could have been self inflicted. The cut in the cap corresponded with the fracture of the skull.

The doctors' report says: When removing the clothes from the body a bullet was found between the waistcoat and the shirt sleeve of the left arm. The body was that of a man about five feet six and one-half inches in height; badly nourished. There was a clot of blood over both eyes and small circular opening on the left side of the nose. The probe showed a wound two inches, the direction, inwards and slightly upwards. Right ear filled with blood. On the left arm there was a long skin abrasion two and one-half inches long. Believe it was cuased by a bullet. There was also a wound in head, extending through paricta bone, upwards and backwards. From these appearances it was conclusive that death was due to hemorrhage caused by a bullet perforating the left extreme carotid artery

At the conclusion of the evidence the coroner addressed the jury who after a short deliberation found that the deceased has come to his death from gunsh t wounds inflicted by some person or persons unknown.

An Arrest

Frank Smith, one of the witnesses who had been examined at the enquiry was arrested by the Mounted Police on Saturday night on suspicion of being concerned in the murder. He was at once lodged in the barracks. Smith is an Englishman about 40 years old who has resided north of the Bow for several years. He formerly worked for Miller & Hay and up to the time of his arrest had been residin at Peterson's ranche, about six seven miles north of the city. He was formally charged this afternoon and on adjournment was agreed upon pending the return of the crown prosecutor to the city. Smith has retained the services of P. J. Nolan as his counsel.

MEDHURST IN TROUBLE.

Former C.P.R. Agent Creates Excitement In Cranbrook.

Nelson Miner: Fred M. Medhurst, who last year was engaged as agent at Cranbrook for the C. P. R., and who is in the provincial jail here, on several charges, has caused the company cosiderable trouble, and especially at the time of his arrest yesterday morning at Cranbrook. This made thethird arrest that he had undergone during the past two weeks, the first two being on charges of theft and this one on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the company. The scene during the arrest which took place in the early morning was probably one of the most exciting ever witnessed in Cranbrook. Medhurst was sleeping comfortably in one of the hotels of that place when he was aroused by a call at his door, and was told that a gentleman wished to see him in the office. He quickly dressed himself and hurried to the office of the hotel, where he was shown the warrant for his arrest and was told that he was wanted in Nelson. He asked for a few minutes that he might see his wife. This is where the excitement started. The constable went with the prisoner to where his wife lived, and when they were on the sidewalk Medhurst cried at the top of his voice for help. But a few moments elapsed before nearly everybody in the town had congregated about the couple. Medhurst cried:

"I want my lawyers, Bill le Ross and Costigan. They are not doing me justice, they will throw me in the river, they will lock me up. I never will get justice in Nelson.

The pleas for help had some effect and several citizens tried to persuade the constable not to take the prisoner away. The two lawyers came rushing to the platform in their shirt sleeves. As the constable paid no attention to their requests the mob tried to free the prisoner by force and retain him until the train pulled out. They crowded so cosely that they had to be forced back before the prisoner could be taken to the train. They then crowded on the steps of the car and were with trouble put off. They were quelled by threats, and when the train left they immediately wired to the chief of police at Moyie to arrest Medhurst as they said he was trying to skip bail. The chief of police at Moyie did not show up, and the prisoner was landed in jail at 5 o'clock last evening. This morning Medhurst was arraigned before Magistrate Crease and the case was adjourned until 5 o'clock this afternoon to await the arrival of Attorney Costigan from Cranbrook.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME

Trooper Jno. McDougall Gives his Impressions of South Africa.

Trooper 614, Strathcona Horse, John B. McDougall, son of the Rev. John McDougall, arrived on Thursday morning from a seven months trip from Calgary to the front with Buller and return.

His itinerary was Montreal, Liverpool, London, St. Vincent, Cape Town, Durban, and then up country to Buller's command. Returning he came via Durban, Cape Town, St. Helena, St. Vincent and Halifax.

Trooper McDougall speaks in high terms of the officers he came in touch with from Captain Adamson to Colonel Steel and General Buller. He thinks that Buller is a great general. He says the country through which this huge man led his army is full of natural difficulties and afforded every opportunity to a wily foe. The whole conutry is one continuous fortress.

He says that South Africa (what he saw of it) is not to be compared with the North West as a country for men to make homes in.

He was one month in hospital at Mooi river because of a hurt and fever. He says this hospital was most admirably managed and everything was done by doctors and nurses for the comfort and help of the patients.

He has no very high estimate of the Boers. The ship he came over on landed some 200 of them at St. Helena.

He says that after about 30,000 miles of world seeing, in his opinion there is no place like Alberta.

HEAVY FIGHTING

The Boers Lost One Hundred and Fifty Three and the British Seven.

Bothaville, Nov. 9.—There has been heavy fighting since Nov. 6th, resulting in the defeat of the Boers, who lost 23 killed, 30 wounded and 100 taken prisoners. Seven of their guns were captured. The British lost three officers and four men killed.

Pretoria, Nov. 9.—The surrendered burghers assert that Mr. Steyn after a council of war with General Botha and General DelaRey addressed the burghers with great passion urging them to continue the war. He told them he was going south, and hoped to return with 5000 men, assuring them that he knew that Germany had delivered an ultimatum to Great Britain, demanding the retrocession of the republic
