

BASEBALL AS IT WAS PLAYED BETWEEN TWO SCRATCH TEAMS.

The baseball match yesterday, between the nine captained by James Neelands and the scratch team, made up largely of rejected material, resulted in an easy victory for the scratch team.

The second nine was sent in to bat on the opening of the game. Eacritt was the only man to reach first, and he was presented with a base on an error of Blackwood's.

Two more were added in the fifth. Emerson got to first on an error at short, and was followed by Blackburn with a two-bagger, Emerson scoring.

Another half-dozen runs were added in the sixth. Caverley was given first on a dead ball and Emerson got there after him through another error at short.

When the seventh-innings was opened Waters was put into the box, and Blackburn, Hawkins and Votau went out in succession.

The last inning was pitched by Samuel Neelands. There were no hits made off him, but he sent Caverley and Smith to first on balls and Hawkins on a dead ball.

The first nine scored two runs in their first inning. Partridge, opened with a two base hit over first and got to third, and from there home on passed balls.

Campbell added another run to the score in the fifth. He opened it with a hit and got home as the result of three errors.

In the second Mills, Sam Neelands and Campbell struck out in one, two three order and the spirits of the scratch teams backers went up.

Campbell skinned to first after having fanned the air three times. He beat the ball there, and slid down to second and third, scoring on a passed ball.

There were several changes made in the positions of the members of the first nine when Blackwood was taken out of the box, of which no account is taken in the appended score, errors in the field being assigned to the positions as originally fixed.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW AND HOW IT IS WORKING.

There is no trouble, more than was reported in THE TRIBUNE yesterday, at any of the mines in the neighborhood of Nelson. THE TRIBUNE'S reporter at New Denver writes as follows, under date of yesterday:

Thursday marked the inception of the first struggle in this camp between capital and labor. Apart from the fact that that there were a few more men in town, no one would be aware that a determined contest was on between organized forces, or that anything unusual was taking place. Throughout the various towns there is no perceptible excitement and not the slightest indication of trouble.

Ymir, June 2.—At midnight a special train arrived with six men for the London & British Columbia Goldfields who had been sworn in at Nelson last evening as special constables for the defence of the property and employees of the Ymir mine, owing to a telegram having been sent down by an official of the company here to the effect that their lives and property were in jeopardy.

DAILY EDITION..... FIRST YEAR, No. 128
WEEKLY EDITION..... SEVENTH YEAR, No. 28

Less than five hundred miners in all Kootenay have quit work through the enforcement of the eight-hour law. These men refuse to work because the mine owners refuse to pay more than $3 a day. Of the five hundred that have quit, one hundred will be engaged for a time in doing assessment work on claims in which they are interested, and another hundred will spend the summer in looking for the surface indications of hidden bonanzas. Of the remaining three hundred, one-half of them will seek work in the mines of Idaho, Montana and Colorado, and the other half will stay in the country and take chances. So, after all, the blue man that was to devastate the country because of the enforcement of the eight-hour law is not even going to be an issue on which the Semlin government can be tipped out of office. The mine owners—most of whom are either aliens or men not particularly in love with Canadians or Canadian institutions—to a man, almost, supported the Turner government, and they are inclined to throw mud at Mr. Semlin and his government at every opportunity. The eight-hour law for men working underground in mines has come to stay. No country has yet repealed any law that shortened the hours of labor for working men. Working men are a political factor in British Columbia—a much more potent factor than alien mine owners and their mine managers.

THREE days have elapsed since the mine owners' ultimatum went into effect, namely, that miners must work for $3 a day or go elsewhere to find work, yet no property has been destroyed or persons injured by the miners who have rejected the mine owners' terms. This is not according to Hoyle. This is not what nine-tenths of the mine owners and their friends wanted and expected. They have been trying to mould public opinion to the belief that every member of a miners' union was either an anarchist or a thug. They are disappointed and are becoming sore because they are being branded as false prophets.

THE IMPORTANCE OF WORK.
Toronto News.
Of all the things that enter into a man's education the most important for him to learn is to work. Education that consists merely of the study of text books is valuable only as it is applied in practical life. This will sound trite to every person, and yet the boys and girls, young women and young men, who are applying all their energies to the study of subjects which from the curricula of colleges and universities do not appreciate the fact that knowledge is of little value unless it is combined with ability to apply it to practical ends.

Some persons imagine that education is an evil in itself, which is manifestly absurd. Education consists of the acquirement of knowledge, and if those whose duty it is to instruct the rising generation could teach them that every opportunity for work should be improved, that to look forward to a life of ease is ignoble, there would be fewer men walking about idle because they are unable to obtain employment in the particular line which their inclination leads them to prefer.

Men who are successful today learned how to work in their youth. Industrious habits were acquired at an early age, and their willingness to meet every responsibility, no matter how onerous, has been the ladder by which they have risen to high places in the world—places coveted by companions of their youth who lacked the same measure of application for difficult and distasteful duties that fell to their lot first, although perhaps more successful in their studies at school.

The men who stand highest in the estimation of the world are those who work hardest. The men who have the largest measure of happiness in the world are the hardest workers. The men who live longest and enjoy the pleasures of the world to the fullest extent are those who by hard work have earned the opportunities to partake of all the good the world has to give.

When a boy reaches the age of seven or ten years, unless he is intended for one of the learned professions, he will be more likely to make a success of his life by beginning the actual training in the calling which he intends to pursue. A knowledge of the world and of the main details of business can be acquired much more readily and thoroughly by a young man whose mind is not filled with the higher mathematics. If he has spent the most impressionable years of his life in studying text books, written by men who never came in contact with life as it is today, and who, notwithstanding their great ability, are unable to impart knowledge that it is most important for the young men to learn, he will be handicapped in the race.

A mistake that most parents make is to imagine that education ceases when their boys leave school. That is when it should begin. The subjects that are taught in our public and high schools are nothing more than the foundation upon which to build the superstructure of culture. If upon leaving school the boy is allowed to throw books aside, then his education is complete, but if a parent understands his duty to his boy he will endeavor to inspire in him a love for literature, the exercise of which will give him wider knowledge than ever he could have gained at school, and better fit him to fill a sphere in life which his abilities may earn for him in the future. As a rule a boy who has learned to work will not be hard to keep within the realm of study, so that the most important thing every young man has to learn today is to work and that the harder he works the more completely will he fulfil his destiny.

Sailor Always.
Admiral Dewey is a sensible sailor, who would not want the presidency of the United States if he could get it, and could not get the presidency of the United States if he wanted it. There is every indication that Dewey is the same quality of man as William Tecumseh Sherman, who knew that he would lose in the white house the glory that he gained in his March to the Sea, and avoided every temptation to run for the presidency. Then it does not follow that the victory at Manila would give admiral Dewey a nomination for the presidency. General Grant returned from his triumphal tour of the world to meet defeat in the Republican convention, where the "Immortal 300" delegates stood by the Silent man to the last ballot, and then failed to nominate him for a third term.

A meeting of the Nelson cricket club was held last evening for the purpose of organizing for the season. The election of officers resulted as follows: J. Roderick Robertson, honorary president; W. F. Brougham, president; A. H. Buchanan, George V. Holt, Hamilton G. Neelands, and A. R. Rowley, vice-presidents. The following were appointed members of the committee; C. M. Brown, John Elliot, H. J. Evans, J. A. Macrae and P. Criddle. John Fraser the former secretary-treasurer having notified the members that he could not continue to discharge the duties of the dual office, Fred Elliot was appointed in his stead. The membership fee of the club was fixed at $3 per annum. Practice will commence at once and all interested in the game will be welcomed on the recreation grounds, and the secretary will be pleased to receive their applications for membership. There were some thirty members in the club last season and the treasurer's statement shows a balance on the right side. The chances are good for a match game during the Dominion Day celebration either with Rossland or some other team.
